

PHOTOGRAPHS BY A. & J. BURKE

An eruption of green

Rising majestically above its surroundings, the Brukkaros Mountain forms a prominent feature in the vast, open plains of Namaland in southern Namibia. For some 100 kilometres in every direction the only mountainous habitat of this magnitude raises expectations of interesting plant and animal life, perhaps some restricted to the mountain. We set out to find out whether or not one can call the Brukkaros Mountain an isolated outpost of biological diversity.

There is hardly any mountain in Namibia that suggests volcanic activity as plainly as the Brukkaros.

The Brukkaros Mountain springs to life

